

Obr.: Single-cell picking involves isolating specific microorganisms from mixed cultures using an inverted microscope, a glass plate with hollow wells, and a micropipette. Target cells are identified under the microscope and carefully aspirated from the culture. They are transferred into a fresh medium for cleaning and finally placed into an Eppendorf tube with DNA preservation buffer for downstream molecular analyses.